

PANORAMA (continued)

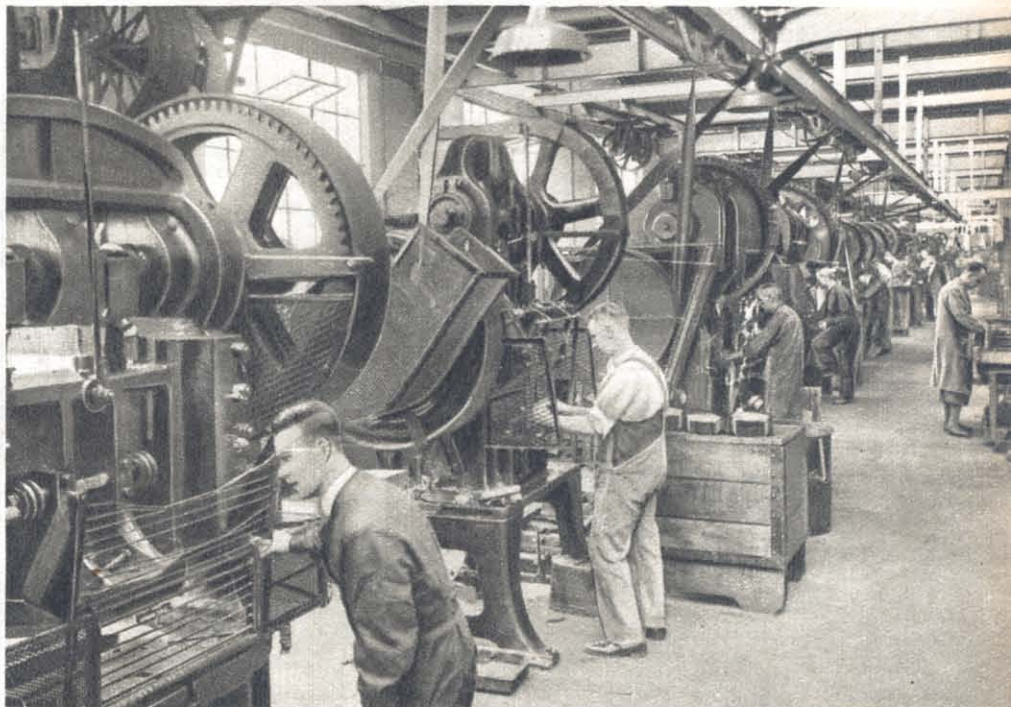

the Austin Works

A drawing office in the designing department, which is concerned with the smaller parts of an Austin chassis.

One of the longest single operations in the production of an Austin car—the engine testing. In order to keep pace with the rest of the factory, the testing department has to be of tremendous size.

(Above) A section of the small press shop.

(Below) The result of the work of so many skilled hands—chassis coming off the assembly line to recommence their travels as their bodies are fitted.

